Malaysia is expected to transition to a high-income nation by 2028, a reflection of the country's economic growth and innovation over the years.

PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP (PPP)

Malaysia began in 1983 when the government introduced its Privatisation Policy. Due to the success of the policy, the public sector in the 1990s, began to encourage and facilitate private sector participation in its infrastructure development. The significant involvement of the private sector has led to a significant increase in the development of infrastructure projects in Malaysia.

By 2006, 2010 saw the government adopting new approaches and the efficacy of the privatisation policy. The government has advised the potential of utilising PPP resources from both the public and private sectors. As a result, Malaysia took further steps to encourage and facilitate public-private partnerships between the public and private sectors in the provision of public facilities and related services.

UKAS PARTNERSHIP UNIT (UKAS), PRIME MINISTER'S DEPARTMENT

The UKAS Partnership Unit (UKAS) is the central body responsible for maintaining, facilitating and coordinating the UKAS Partnership Unit. Established on 22 April 2009 under the Prime Minister's Department, UKAS endeavours to address the challenges faced by the public and private sectors in the provision of public facilities and related services. PPP has attracted interest from governments and international organisations, and international study visits and consultations.

To date, UKAS has held engagements and consultations with countries such as Uganda, Tanzania, United Arab Emirates, Ghana, Bangladesh, Sudan, India, Mongolia, Singapore and Canada, and international organisations including World Bank, International Monetary Fund (IMF), Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC), Islamic Development Bank (IDB), Asia Development Bank (ADB) and Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA).

Recognising the growing importance of Public Private Partnerships in the economic development of a country, Malaysia through UKAS is proud to promote her experience and best practices in PPP projects to other developing nations.
